Dear Sir or Madam. I am a professional chef at a prestigious restaurant/hotel in Morris, CT. We pride ourselves in avoiding GE food in our cuisine. Although the jury is still out on safety, etc, the real issue is simple. Transparency. Giving this issue close examination, there are many unanswered questions. The GE complex has nothing to fear, I am sure they will always have a market. There is mandated labeling all over the world, (61 countries), yet GE products still land on grocery shelves. It is the subversive will of processed food companies,(who rely heavily on these cheap foods to turn profits), that we as consumers are kept in the dark. These same processed food companies place non-mandated claims on their labels, yet contentiously and fervently fight having to place a small mandated label on their packaging that would let a consumer decide whether or not to purchase. This is clearly the crux of the matter. They don't want the consumer to be able to decide. We want this. CT wants this, my clients want this. Let's not give in to false threats. Pepsi would never sustain losing CT as a market. They will change the labels. I assure you.

Sincerely, for our future,

Chris Eddy
